An Insider's View On All Things Hosta – Giant, Mini, New and Rare!

Josh Roggenbuck has a lifelong background in agriculture, starting on a sugar beet farm and later developing a passion for plants through experiences at a Christmas tree farm and a landscape nursery. He earned a degree in Horticulture from Michigan State University and co-founded a greenhouse and garden center with his parents, running it for nine seasons. At Walters Gardens, North America's leading producer of perennial plants, he oversees Midwest sales and supports initiatives with retail companies and landscape designers. Walters Gardens is known for producing over 1000 plant varieties and introducing about 50 new ones each season. Josh lives in Mid-Michigan with his wife Sarah and daughters Stella and Hattie.
